Old Guard as Escort.

A short rest and Mr. Taft was off again, to the Sherman Square Hotel, under the escort of Gen. George B. Loud, chairman of the memorial committee of the G. A. R., where there was waiting the old guard, prepared to es-cort the President to the Soldiers' and Sailors' monument on Riverside Drive, where was the reviewing stand.

In the President's party in the re-viewing stand were many civil war veterans, including Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles, Maj. Gen. J. H. Stahl, Brig. Gens. A. G. McCook, Horace Porter, and Thomas H. Hubbard. There were also Col. John J. McCook, Col. John Jacob Astor, and former Vice President Levi P. Morton, Henry Clews, Isaac N. Seligman, and several State and muni-cipal officials.

Seligman, and several State and municipal officials.

At the moment of the President's arrival at the monument, the scout cruiser Salem, lying offshore, fired a salute of twenty-one guns.

The parade started soon after Mr. Taft was in the stand. Never before was the route so short as today. It covered only a mile, from Seventy-second street to Ninety-second. There was much opposition among the veterans to this, as well as to the provision of automobiles for some of them, but hoth steps were necessary to protect the men who fought more than forty-five years ago.

CUSTER MONUMENT AWAITS UNVEILING

Number of Washingtonians Will Take Prominent Part in Ceremonies.

Washington people have a prominent place on the program for the ceremonies neident to the unveiling of the equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. George Arm-strong Custer at Monroe, Mich., next Saturday. President Taft, who is to be the guest of honor and make the principal speech, will be one of a quintet of notables who claim the District of Columbia as their home, for a part of the year at least. Mrs. Custer, who is here most of the year, will pull the cord that loosens the covering on the statue; Senator William Alden Smith is to be orator of the day, and speeches will be made by Maj. Gen. David McMurtrie Gregg, U. S. A., retired, and Brig. Gen. Edward W. Whitaker, both of Wash-

Easy to secure big profits now we'll be content with doubling the sales.

The Summer Girls' Sunday Waists are very dainty this year-less showy, but more stylish than in the past. And note that $1.69 here buys the garments for which the specialty stores ask as much as $5.00. Witness the infinitesimally small tucks and stitching, the fairylike laces, and the exqui site hand embroidery of the garments offered at $1.69. Remember that The Palais Royal is sharing the advantages of purchases made when summer weather seemed as if it would never come. Remember that these waists are more today at wholesale than here at retail. Remember that the demand will be great-and that no more can be bought or sold at the price.
